Seattle Parks and Recreation invites the community to a public meeting to discuss the Whale Tale Park Comfort Station Renovation project.

The meeting will be held on Thursday, June 12, from 7 – 8:30 p.m. at the Alki Community Center, 5817 SW Stevens Ave.

This project was initially presented as a renovation of the existing facility. Two factors have changed since the original plan was put forth.

The first is that Parks has determined it is more efficient to build a new comfort station, rather than renovate the existing facility. A new building will mean the installation of:

- ADA access
- New and upgraded fixtures, including sinks, toilets, wall mountings and hardware
- Baby-changing table

The second is that the new facility's footprint will double in size. The additional square footage will accommodate storage of beach cleaning equipment. Access to the storage area will be from 59th Avenue SW.

This project's objectives are to "rehabilitate the comfort station for improved ADA access, safety and an inviting appearance, per City and State Codes and Department standards, by the end of 2003." The total budget is $200,000.
